Mare Etchings and Books Relating to 'Dance of Death' on View To-day.

Some of the most important art exhibitions of the season open to the public to-day in the galleries of the American Art Association. These include the rare manuscripts and classic examples of printing from the William C. Van Antwerp library, the extraordinary prints and books relating to the "Dance of Death," collected by Miss Susan Minns of Boston: valuable tapestries who worked with Caxton and afterward became a great printer himself, this being one of his first publications.

Another feature of this library is the illuminated manuscript copy of the "Froissart Chronicles," on vellum, made in France, circa 1390. This is a splendid example of fourteenth century miniaturist's art in fine condition. It was made for Pierre de Fontenoy, a friend of Charles VI. of France and bears his arms. In the sixteenth century this other Rare Books in List.

Other rare items in this library are the Tasso that was presented by Cardinal Mazarin to Queen Christina of Sweden, the Magna Charta, 1587; William Morrie's illuminated thirteenta century Bible on vellum; "Thomas Aquinas" printed by Johann Mentelin; the "Gratianus-Discretum," by Henry Eggestein of Strassburg, 1471; the Coverdale Bible in English, and a Psalter, by Cornellus Henrici.

The "Dance of Death" engravings and volumes collected by Miss Minns compromise over one thousand items. The extent of the collection, however. The extent of the collection, however, is not more amazing than its quality. The nobility of a poet or an artist, some critics claim, may be judged by his attitude toward the subject of death, and certainly in Miss Minns's collection there are much that touches the highest reaches.

The other guests were Mr. and Mrs. program, which will include a Snow-Henry W. Taft, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Sheffleld, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Sheffleld, Mr. and Mrs. John Corbin, Mr. tittled "Daffodils." There also will be an Mrs. William Barciay Parsons, Mrs. Russian, gipsy and other dances, including the latest modern steps. The miss. Minns confesses that it is the "Dance of Death" of Holbein, upon which she founded her collection, and a copy of this work is undoubtedly the star item in it. This is the rare first edition in fine condition. With it are seventy-eight Holbein items, and among them are almost every known edition of the "Dance of Death."

Holbein's "Dance of Death" followed holbein's "Dance of Death" of the "Dance of Death."

Holbein's "Dance of Death" followed the tradition of the old mediaeval pageants on the grewsome but improving theme, which subsequently found their way into mural decorations and many a "Book of Hours." Holbein, however, is the most famous of the artists who have handled the topic, and Miss Minns, accordingly, spared no pains to make her Holbein series complete.

Many Beautiful Miniatures

Among the "Horae," are many with particularly beautiful miniatures, including a fine fifteenth century French work on vellum, and one of the middle of that century bound by Derome, the younger. There is also the "Emblemes" by Georgette de Mouteney from the Hoo

The Van Antwerp manuscripts, which are to be sold May 1, are the most important that the association has brought forward this year. The list starts off with five Caxtons, the first Caxton edition of the "Canterbury Tales," the "Polychronicon," by Higden, the monk of Chester; the "Confessio Amantis," printed at Westminster September 2, 1483; the "Game and Playe of Chesses," by Cessolis, and the "Eneydos" of Virgil.
